Her son Jim knows the Sheenjek country real well. They look at the map, Boxcar Slough. Abbie points out an old graveyard. "Looked like a big person's grave there but they don't know who it was," she says.
When there was high water, Abbie used to go up the slough on Old Man Lake. That area has burned. Ganley tells how they found a red bead at the bottom of an old cache pit or hole there. It's nice there, with high land. Stanley Jonas owns the place there now. His boys built a house around there last year. You could see it from the Porcupine, Abbie says.
Stanley's father, Chief Jonas, used to have that place. Old Man Lake is where the old people used to gather in Chief Jonas's time.
Abbie's brother, Richard Martin, went up the river with Bill Pfeister this spring. Richard knows more of the native names for areas than she does. He lives in Fairbanks, at #2 Chena Court.
Joe Carroll has a house at 17-mile, Abbie guesses. There's a newer looking cabin 7 miles up the Sheenjek, Ganley says. Abbie thinks it's Sam Hughes's boys place. It's sitting of her son Johnny's ground.
Abbie comments that it's hot today. The fish spoil easy when it's too hot (when trying to dry them). She tells about her son who didn't get any fish in his fish net, so he built a fish wheel. He didn't get any fish in the fish wheel, either, so he gave up. People might be catching a few silver salmon now.
